BISHOP HAMILTON
ON MISCEGENATION

doubt that the suggestion will be adopted. A bishop will then visit the islands at least once a year."

Bishop Hamilton is at present the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Howard on Beretania street and there he was seen today.

"We do not aim to interfere with the work of any other church," he said in speaking of what he considered to be the mission of Methodism "rather we wish to forward every Christian effort. I would not raise a finger to take any person from the fold of any other church but there are any number of people outside of any Christian influence and these are the people we want to aid. It seems to me that there is a big field among the Koreans and this field has been discovered and worked by Rev. Mr. Wadman here in Hawaii. The field has grown too large for him though and if we left him, he'll kill himself with work. He must have at least one assistant. He is unselfish and uncompromising but he cannot be expected to go ahead attending to the general duties imposed by the work of a church and at the same time attend to the Korean and Japanese missions. I shall make a report recommending special appropriations for the Japanese and for the Korean work to the general missionary committee. This committee," explained the bishop, "is composed of all the bishops, all of the missionary secretaries and also representatives of the entire church, both lay and clergy. It will meet in Buffalo New York next November but in the meantime a provisional appropriation has been made for our Hawaiian work."

Speaking of Methodism generally, Bishop Hamilton made the remark that it is rather an inspiration than an organization. John Wesley, he said, was always a member of the Church of England and it was only in his intenseness that he differed and had difficulties with his mother church.

"I cannot say it too strongly," he said "we have no quarrel with any other church and I am glad to say that no other church has any unfriendliness for us. Look for instance, here in Honolulu. The people of the Central Union church have given us sympathy, aid and indeed actual support when it was most needed. That is the true spirit."

Perhaps in his much quoted utterances on the subject of miscegenation Bishop Hamilton is best known.

"Yes, I thought you would come to that," he said with a laugh when the subject was introduced, "but the fact is that I have been misrepresented. I did make a speech in which I referred to the gradual mixing of the races but I simply made a statement of facts did not for an instant advocate miscegenation. But what is the use of closing one's eyes to the existing state of affairs? There were 30,000 mulattoes born in the United States last year. That is a concrete fact enough is it not? It makes no difference whether this was the result of slum life or whether it was the result of some of the vices of the rich—the fact remains. If the United States is to be the scene of the solidification of the human race we should prepare for that. At all events nothing but good can come from a free discussion of so momentous a subject. The suggestion that I was ever an apostle of miscegenation is absurd. I am a Virginian—but I have said and I so say that the human race was once a unit and there seems to me no reason why it should not become so again. Of course it would be a matter of centuries but there is no getting away from the facts as they exist today. Our personal prejudices cannot stand in the way of events but there surely should be no objection to a free discussion of any matter of this sort and because a man states the facts as they are there is not any necessity for the conclusion that he approves of existing conditions."

"I have seen persons come into the bank drunk and write checks no one could read," said Huestace, "and still I have at times accepted signatures so made, because I saw the signing."

At the conclusion of the hearing Judge Robinson intimated very strongly his view that the will had been shown to be genuine and that the contestant must take the burden of proof to disprove it. Achi, who appeared for the husband contesting the alleged will, asked to be allowed to file a brief and was given to next Friday.

BAND CONCERT TONIGHT.

There'll be record breaking jollity on the streets this evening.

Christmas Eve is always marked by throngs of people. The tempting window displays of the stores draws people to the business thoroughfares and hold them there until the last lights have been extinguished.

Tonight there will be an additional and extraordinary attraction. The Hawaiian band will honor the occasion by dispensing sweet and seasonable music in the Catholic church grounds. The location for the band was chosen on account of its proximity to three of the most popular stores. People who go that way on business bent will find themselves detained by pleasure and the sight on Upper Fort street this evening should be a particularly novel one.

CHARLIE REMEMBERED.

John Charles Peterson, the Diamond Head lookout better known as Diamond Head Charlie, wishes to express his thanks to the merchants of the city for their generous remembrance of him at this Christmas time. Col. Soper, as usual, took the lead in getting up the remembrance.

DR. ARMITAGE MOVES HERE.

Dr. Edward Armitage who has been practicing at Wailuku for some time past, has formed an association with Dr. F. H. Humphris of this city and by the beginning of the year will be located with him in the quarters now occupied on Hotel street across from the Hawaiian Hotel. Surgery is Dr. Armitage's pet department and he also makes a specialty of the eye, ear, nose and throat. The combination of the two well-known medical men will be a strong one.

EXPECTS CALLED ON HANDWRITING

such a matter was a fraud. Signatures which were admitted to be those of the decedent were shown to the witnesses, and they all agreed that the signature on the will differed very markedly from these. Huestace declared positively that in his opinion the same party had not written the various signatures exhibited. It was admitted by all, however, on cross-examination by Cecil Brown, who appeared for the proponent of the will, that a person's signature might vary a great deal, as a result of illness or other circumstances.

"I have seen persons come into the bank drunk and write checks no one could read," said Huestace, "and still I have at times accepted signatures so made, because I saw the signing."

At the conclusion of the hearing Judge Robinson intimated very strongly his view that the will had been shown to be genuine and that the contestant must take the burden of proof to disprove it. Achi, who appeared for the husband contesting the alleged will, asked to be allowed to file a brief and was given to next Friday.

The estate is valued at about $2,150.

WELL KNOWN

the vessel and Captain Saunders' daughter would have accompanied them. This morning the news of the death of Captain Calhoun was received. The nature of his fatal illness was not stated but it is not unlikely that he had pneumonia.

The deceased was born in Seattle and was 35 years of age. He was one of the youngest ship masters of the Pacific. He had been master for the past ten years. He was formerly master of the bark Ceylon, the barkentine Archer, the bark R. P. Rithet and later the George Curtis. Calhoun was a very skillful navigator and was well liked.

His father who was one of the oldest navigators that visited these waters, died several years ago. The elder Calhoun was the master of the barkentine Archer at the time of his death.

MAKING SOY

The sauce so generally used both by Japanese and Chinese as a general condiment, taking the place of salt, pepper, mustard and other table accessories is known as "soy," and there are many races other than Oriental who prefer soy to any other sauce. However that may be it is a fact that the Japanese here in Hawaii, to get down to a concrete proposition, use soy with every meal. They use it on fish, rice, meat—in fact on everything they eat, and the importations of soy from Japan amounts to 20,000 ten-gallon kegs per month.

The fact that there is a duty of 35 per cent on it added to the freight naturally makes the price considerably higher than it is in Japan, but the Japanese must have it. As well try to rob the Englishman of his beer or the Scotchman of his whisky as to rob the Jap of his soy.

It entered the head of M. Yamakami that it would be a highly profitable enterprise to make soy and so, from seed brought from Japan he commenced growing the soy bean in Kona. This was done at a minimum of expense as the shrub is grown between the rows of coffee trees.

Then he established a small factory which has grown to such an extent that he had to move to a larger place, and is now going to double the capacity of his establishment. This is the only soy factory of any account outside of Asia.

The new factory is out at Palama, on the street Waikeiki of St. Elizabeth's church and mauka of King street. The process of making the relish so prized by the Japanese is most interesting.

Equal portions of the soy bean and of ripe wheat are used. The wheat is winnowed and then roasted. Incidentally it may be noted that the winnowing as it was seen this morning was being done by the method used before the days of the Pharaohs by pouring from a scoop and allowing the wind to carry the chaff away.

"Pretty soon I will get a machine from the States to do that," said proprietor Yamakami.

The soy beans, little yellowish white things of the size of a pea, are not roasted however, they are boiled for twelve hours.

The roasted wheat is ground to a coarse flour and the two products, the boiled soy and the wheat are mixed.

The fermenting stage is reached, the mixture is placed on trays, there are thirteen hundred of these, and there it dries out until a fine mould forms on it. As soon as the eye of the expert detects the exact moment the stuff—there seems to be no other name for it—is put into vats with a mixture of extremely strong brine and is fermented further. Steam heat, applied from below, helps the process. The fermented mass is put into bags which are replaced under a press and the liquor which exudes is soy. The process is not yet over, however, for the "Number One" Soy has to ripen for six months before it is placed on the market.

Down at the factory today all was activity for orders are flowing in thick and fast.

"I am making just as good soy as they can in Japan," said Yamakami, "and although I have yet to put it on the market, Hackett & Co. have arranged to handle all that I can make. I intend to double the capacity of the factory as soon as I can."

The point of the local establishment of a soy factory lies in the fact that the local manufacturers can sell his product at $2.50 per keg of 10 gallons, wholesale, whereas the imported soy costs $2.75.
